Is pleased to present...

FROM THE PASTORAL TO THE POLITICAL LOCAL FOOD PRODUCTION, LAND USE, AND COMMUNITIES

Juror: Leah Niederstadt, Professor of Museum Studies, Art History, and Curator of Permanent Collections at Wheaton College

Concept: Food production, land use, and the building of community are interconnected themes. What is the relationship between the local food movement, farming and how we look at issues such as agribusiness, GMOs, and man-made chemicals? How has the preservation of land and natural resources become vital? The various local food movements found across the country have helped build their communities and created new economies.

This national juried exhibition seeks to explore the potential of artists within this dialogue. What do artists have to say about localism, how are they responding to these issues in their work, and what can contemporary art add to this discussion?
